

Lotpath Consulting Services Offer Food Industry Expertise

Fresno, California, October 1, 2009

Since 1994, the founders of Lotpath have been designing and developing software for food industry clients. With many different types of clients and projects, Lotpath possesses a breadth of experience unique to the industry. Lotpath has assembled a Consulting Services team that is available to provide value added services to food industry companies. As a special incentive for new customers, Lotpath is offering a free one year subscription to Lotpath Product List for any new customers who sign a consulting services agreement. This offer is available for a limited time.

Mike Dodson, Co-founder and CEO of Lotpath, reports "Our team of consultants has built solutions for all aspects of the food supply chain, from farm data collection systems to sophisticated warehouse order fulfillment systems involving handhelds and complex pallet picking and truck loading rules" The Lotpath team has built software for harvest data collection, crop budgeting, receipt of raw materials and packaging items, recipe management, inventory management, production planning and scheduling, quality control, lot and batch management, case and pallet labeling, sales forecasting, internal traceability, and more. "Basically, if you name it, we've probably built it," adds Dodson.

Lotpath Consulting Services team members are talented individuals dedicated to thoroughly understanding the latest available technologies and the best practices in the food industry. Dodson reports "We've got team members with years of experience and we've added some new talent recently in anticipation of major changes coming to the food industry related to traceability. The Produce Traceability Initiative (PTI) in the produce industry is one example of an industry change that has created confusion and anxiety. Our consulting team is available today to help companies both comply with industry initiatives and advance their internal technology initiatives."
